00:42:40 Jen Ainsworth - (she/her/hers) Exec Director: <https://wildones.org/board-members/eric-fuselier/>

01:40:16 Nancy Peterson: Fascinating way to further appreciate native plants.

01:40:21 Jennifer Reed: Wow! My mind is on fire, so much amazing information! So hopeful!

01:40:26 Ely, Joyce: What a wealth of information...fantastic!

01:40:43 Mallory: that was wonderful, thank you so much!

01:40:58 Karen Owens-NorthernChester: Pearls of information that will be useful in many circumstances.

01:41:05 Deb Schelling: So much helpful information.

01:41:15 Katharine Hamerton: Wow. Could you please explain a bit more about disposal of plant tissues that have taken up toxins? I don't understand how they can be composted.

01:41:25 Anthony Antonucci: Great talk with tremendous information! - Upstate New York.

01:41:36 Nick Douglas: How can we convince the "trillion tree" people and urban forest advocates that native grasslands are better at carbon capture?

01:41:38 Grand Rapids Friends Meeting: Where can we go and learn more about this? Links?

01:44:17 Jess: This was fascinating, thank you!

01:44:17 Susan Fineman: Thanks for your excellent presentation with so much "new" info I've not seen before. How does Eastern redcedar do at collecting particulates?

01:44:18 Katharine Hamerton: Should we plant non natives to avoid that contamination of the tropic chain?

01:45:37 Susan Bloyer: Trees are extremely valuable, as well as grassland. Urban areas without trees are devoid of interest and are poor oxygenators. ND, Spend your time convincing the turf lawn folks!!

01:53:03 Nick Douglas: @Susan Bloyer - I agree trees are very valuable and urban tree canopies are important. But I'm seeing well meaning people convert landscapes that historically were primarily grasslands or savannas and open woodlands into forests in their misguided efforts "save the planet". Ecosystem restoration is important, especially of our most imperiled ecosystems. In my region, the Southeast, we have lost 99% of our grasslands.

01:53:36 Marcia Goodrich: Wonderful talk!

01:53:37 kellie: this was such a cool talk!! thank you Eric!

01:53:38 Susan Fortenberry: Excellent info! Thanks so much!

01:53:43 Jennifer Reed: Thank you!!!

01:53:47 Mary Monaco: Awesome presentation- thank you

01:54:01 Elizabeth Hiser, Cuyahoga SWCD (she/her/hers):A lot of great information. Thank you for sharing!

01:54:06 Lucy Valitchka: Thanks for the valuable information.

01:54:10 mIm: Utterly FANTASTIC webinar! THANK YOU SO MUCH!!!

01:54:20 Mary Monaco: What about trying to remediate the effects of Roundup

01:54:26 John Sherman: Thank you for a terrific presentation.

01:54:27 Bonnie Juran: Wow! I learned a lot! Thanks!

01:54:36 Namrata (she / her): Thank you Eric. Awesome webinar

01:54:46 Namrata (she / her): Very good information

01:54:46 Katharine Hamerton: Thank you! Incredibly informative.

01:54:47 Jen Ainsworth - (she/her/hers) Exec Director: <https://wildones.org/ross-public-gardens-registration/>

01:54:49 Marilyn Brown: Excellent webinar! Thank you!

01:54:57 Jen Ainsworth - (she/her/hers) Exec Director: We will provide as much information we can in a follow up email with the recording, we also have a nurse list that you can contact to see if they carry the native plant you are looking for. <https://nativegardendesigns.wildones.org/nursery-list/>

01:55:13 Jane B: Thank you! A very different perspective, and an important one.

01:55:27 Patricia Dunbar: Excellent presentation. Thank you!

01:55:31 Kevin: This was fantastic, but there was more focus on contaminants than I was expecting. I'd be interested in more discussion on other phytotechnology, like how to manage water and flooding around a property.

01:55:32 Jen Ainsworth - (she/her/hers) Exec Director: Join Wild Ones Now – Member Account - <https://members.wildones.org/join/>

01:55:38 Namrata (she / her): Can we validate landscape companies that are sustainable, support the local ecology, etc?

01:56:02 Anne Hagood: Could you provide links to plants and what they phytoremediate?

01:56:06 Jen Ainsworth - (she/her/hers) Exec Director: Don't forget to complete the post event survey! <https://wildones.org/webinar-survey-phytoremediation/>
